Quarterly commentary

Over the quarter global inflation rose amid higher fuel prices and increased demand as many economies continue to reopen. As expected, the South African Reserve Bank kept interest rates unchanged at its record low of 3.5% while warning that slow progress in vaccinations, limited energy supply and policy uncertainty continues to pose downside risks to the economic outlook. Locally the consumer price index (CPI) spiked to 5.2% pushing it above the mid-point of the SARB's target range (4.5%).

Given the low base which most nations were operating from, rising inflation was to be expected. The unexpected degree and potential structural shift driving high inflation has raised concerns. However the FED kept interest rates unchanged and maintained that inflation while elevated will likely moderate in 2022.
